What is Life Skills?

"The psychosocial ability to behave in adaptive and positive ways that enable a person to fulfil needs and resolve daily challenges effectively." (KBBI)

What is Life Skills?

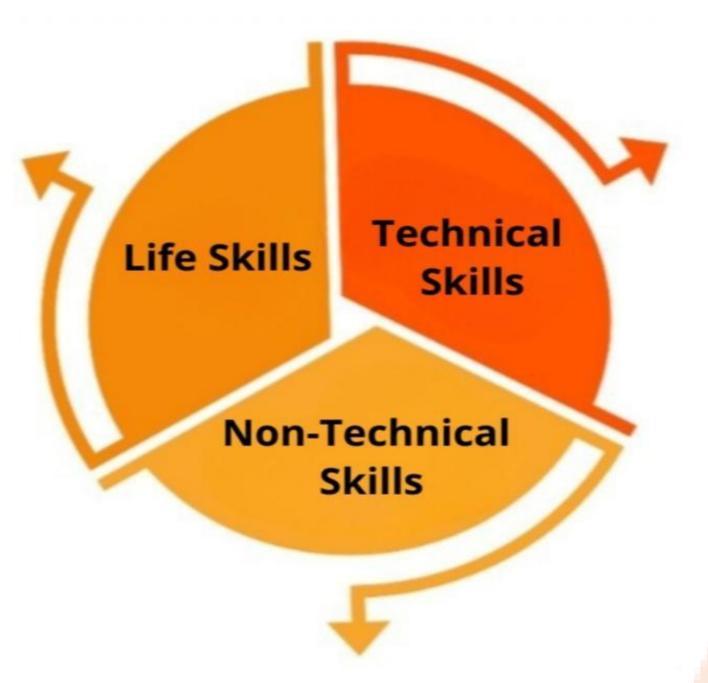

According to WHO?

"It includes personal actions, social interactions, and efforts to change the environment to better support health and productivity, with the aim of helping individuals face daily challenges and achieve success in various aspects of life."

In practice, combining all three can have a balance for both personal and professional life

Life Skills. The fundamental things that need to be owned to develop technical skills and non-technical skills to be more optimal.

Technical skills that need to be supported by non-technical skills

Non-Technical Skills are crucial in the modern workplace where collaboration and relationship management are prioritized.

What is the objective?

Young people can improve the skills and competencies needed for individuals to become active and responsible citizens in society.
