

Pro-Social Risk Behaviour

Learning Objectives

Understand that every decision made is a result of a particular situation.

Identify personal attitudes toward decisions and responses based on situational factors

Build empathy

What is Risk Behavior?

Risky behavior is frequently linked solely to negative activities like substance abuse or criminal acts. Nevertheless, risk-taking can also lead to beneficial results, such as:

Meet new people and expand your network of friends

Start a challenging new business or project

Participate in academic or sports competitions

How Adults Can Help

Youth will still take risks. So, encourage them to take safe and prosocial risks, such as:

Volunteering in social activities

Try to join a sports team or take part in extracurricular activities

Become a class committee or perform in school events

Prosocial Risk Taking (PSRT)

PRPS is a risk-taking action taken to help others. Main characteristics of PRPS are:

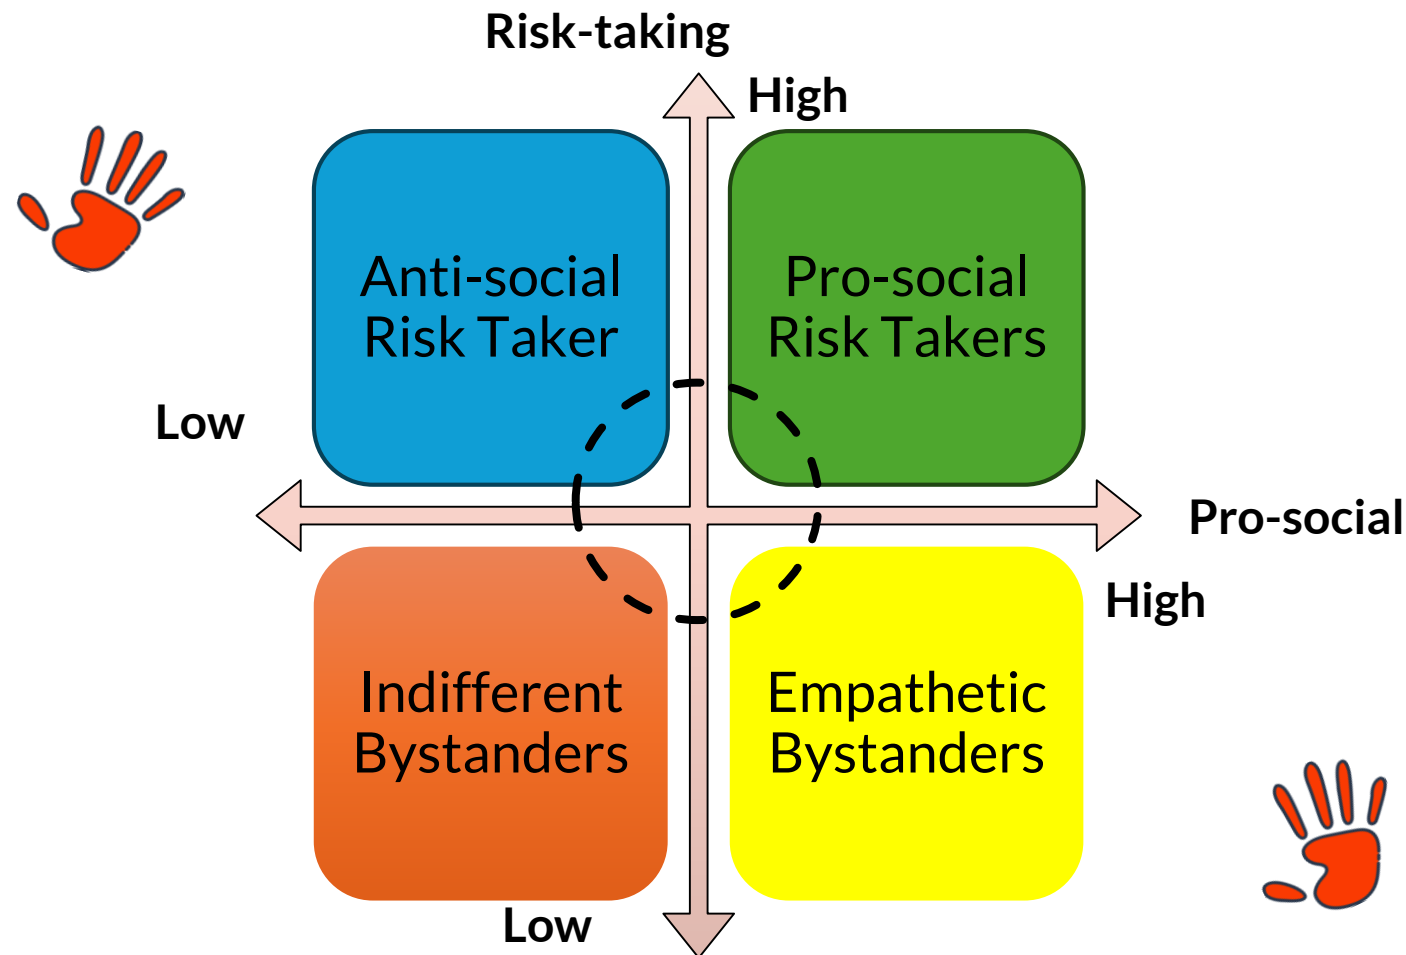

1. Aims to help others without personal gain

2. Involves personal costs or risks, whether social, emotional or physical

Risk Taking in Learning

There are those who are in the area close to the circle and those who are away from the circle. Those in the first category are more sensitive to social inputs and can be influenced to behave according to the other category.

Types of Risk-Taking & Pro-social Individuals

Pro-social Risk Takers

- Dare to take risks for the good of others

Anti-social Risk Takers

- Likes to take risks, but in an adverse way

Empathetic Bystanders

- Have empathy, but afraid to take risks

Indifferent Bystanders

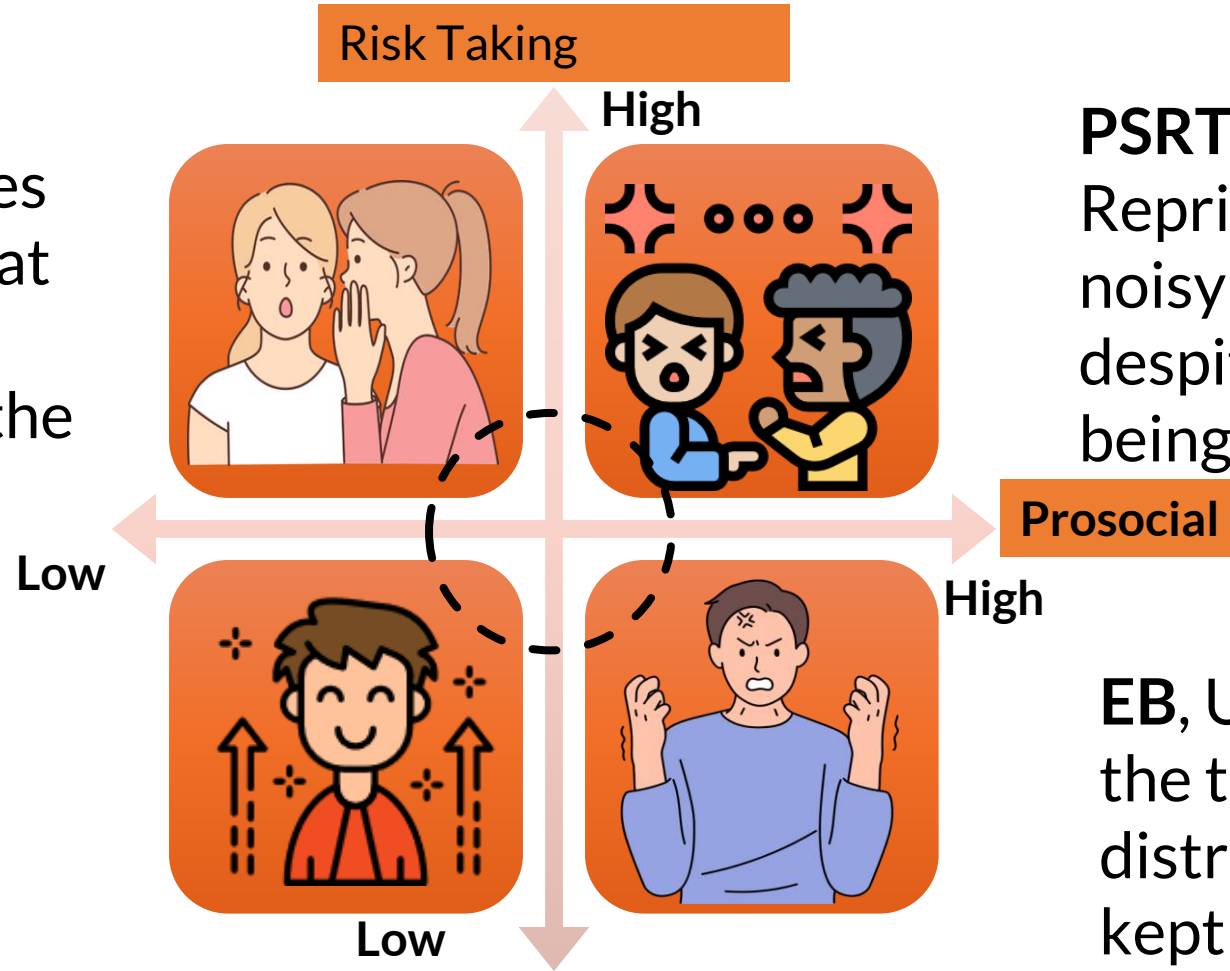

- Not concerned with the surrounding situation
